COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. -- USA Hockey and Sani Sport announced today that they have reached an agreement establishing Sani Sport as an official sponsor of USA Hockey's National Team Development Program.

Sani Sport has supplied USA Hockey's NTDP with one of its patented moisture less sanitation machines. A second machine will also be available to USA Hockey national teams that take part in festivals, camps, or tournaments at the Olympic Center in Lake Placid, N.Y.

"Sani Sport's willingness to work directly with our National Team Development Program has proved invaluable," said Mike Bertsch (Colorado Springs, Colo.), senior director of corporate affairs and fundraising for USA Hockey. "We are very pleased with the product and its benefit for our athletes."

Sani Sport's patented sports equipment sanitation machine uses purified air to eliminate bacteria and odor while guarding against future bacteria build up. Six National Hockey League teams utilize Sani Sport to protect their athletes from harmful bacterial infections.

"We want to make our technology available and well known in the American marketplace," said Steve Silver (Montreal, Quebec), owner and president of Sani Sport. "We hope that the moms and dads of young American hockey players will begin looking at this process as more than just cleaning smelly equipment."

NOTE: The Buffalo Sabres, Boston Bruins, Los Angeles Kings, St. Louis Blues, Vancouver Canucks and Washington Capitals currently use the Sani Sport machine in their home rinks or training facilities.
